Lost Valley Educational Center and Green Living Project Announce Strategic Partnership

February 22, 2011, Dexter, OR - Sustainability education center and eco-village Lost Valley Educational Center announces a new partnership with Green Living Project™ (GLP), the leading media production and distribution company showcasing global sustainability-related initiatives.

Lost Valley is now GLP's eco-village and sustainability education partner, a unique niche that GLP has, until now, not tapped. Through this partnership, Lost Valley will be able to reach more adult students for its courses in permaculture, gardening, and eco-building. This is due to GLP's large visibility and market presence amongst citizens who are interested in and want to support sustainability projects. Lost Valley will be one of the featured partners on GLP's coast-to-coast Mobile Tour, which educates, inspires, and entertains people on GLP's compelling stories and global destinations.

GLP has documented 60+ unique and successful sustainability-related projects across 17 countries, going a step further to support and teach others about these projects. In Lost Valley, GLP sees a sustainable lifestyle that goes beyond mere purchasing decisions and travel destinations to a long-term way of being, plus educating about permaculture and natural design. It is thus an organic partnership of an organization working for ecologically responsible living and a company that documents and supports such projects.

About Lost Valley Educational Center

Lost Valley is a 501(c)3 nonprofit conference center that sponsors and hosts courses in permaculture, organic gardening, green building, and related topics. Its 5- to 8-week courses provide both theory and hands-on experience in sustainability practices, and attract adult students from across the country. On its 87 acres in the foothills of the Cascades, Lost Valley also houses a 21-year-old intentional community of environmentally-minded individuals and families, making it a true living laboratory of sustainability initiatives.
